Vitia erunt, donec homines.—Tacitus.

Nemo repente fuit turpissimus.—Juvenal.

Tuta scelera esse possunt: secura non possunt.—Seneca.

The annals of criminal jurisprudence exhibit human nature in a variety of positions, at once the most striking, interesting and affecting. They present tragedies of real life, often brightened in their effect by the grossness of the injustice and the malignity of the prejudices which accompany them.—Burke.

PREFACE.

THE first and second editions of this bibliography concerning Crime and several cognate subjects were prepared in 1914 and in 1916 at a time when the present compiler held an administrative post in India dealing with Police and Prisons. It was primarily intended for the use of the libraries of two Provincial Police Colleges in India. Within a further twenty years a great deal more material has been collected : during this period, especially the second half, there has been a large output of criminological literature, and an increasing interest taken by the public in the prevention and detection of crime and in the humanitarian treatment of the criminal. From 1928 to 1930 the compiler had also experience as the founding editor of "The Police Journal", and more recently has assisted in regard to the formation of a library at the Metropolitan Police College inaugurated in 1934. The time seems clearly opportune for a new edition. This third edition has accordingly been prepared and placed at the disposal of the Secretary of State for Home Affairs, who has kindly consented to its being printed and published by the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District.

Criminology has been held to include the whole problem of crime and its treatment in human society. The subject is vast and world wide, co-extensive with the frailty of human nature ; therefore, some selection has to be made. A complete bibliography trenches on the one hand on the domain of psychology, and on the other on the domain of law : it overlaps the spheres of the physician, the lawyer, the statesman, and the social worker. In addition to the books published in English within the British Empire, there has been a considerable output of literature published in the United States, as is indicated in Kuhlman's Guide (1929) and Culver's Bibliography (1934) on p. 88. There is also and extensive literature on the subject in French, German and Italian. Criminal anthropology is the speciality of Italian, and criminal psychology of German publications. Although not professing to be exhaustive, this list of books has now, after a rigorous revision, been made reasonably comprehensive and international, covering in the main a period of fifty years. Pamphlets are generally excluded, but some special items from periodical literature have been inserted. The earlier items are naturally out of print ; but this does not detract from their value as sources for the historical study of their respective sections. The standpoint of the compilation, as distinct from bibliographies prepared in the United States of America or on the Continent, is British.

The system of the classification of titles within the sections is mainly analytical ; and chronological, not alphabetical, within each sub-section ; but the requisite alphabetical reference is furnished by two indexes, one being a subject index combined with a geographical index, and the other an index of authors. The original classification has been revised considerably : there are now over 200 subject headings, dealing with about 1900 titles. Each entry contains, first, the title in italics ; followed by the author's name in roman capitals ; followed by the imprint, within brackets, of (i) place, (ii) publisher's name and (iii) date. As regards the imprint, where no place of publication is given, it is to be assumed, generally, in the case of books written in English, that it is London. For the purpose of facilitating research pains have been taken to ascertain as far as possible, and to insert, the names of publishers. The arrangement of entries under each subject heading is in the order of date of publication ; thus an easy reference is ensured to the relevant literature in any particular section, showing the development of ideas. There is inevitably some overlapping in the headings. In a few cases certain entries which are applicable to more than one heading are repeated under such headings ; there are also cross references. Explanatory notes are inserted in square brackets. The volume contains blank pages as a provision for future entries.

For help and advice received the compiler would record his grateful acknowledgments to Lord Trenchard, Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, and Lt.-Col. J. F. C. Carter, Deputy Asst. Commissioner ; to Sir John Moylan, Receiver, and Mr. L. W. Fox, Deputy Receiver, Metropolitan Police ; to Lt.-Col. G. H. R. Halland, Commandant, and Chief Inspector R. Morrish, Metropolitan Police College ; and to Mr. C. H. Putley, Superintendent of Printing, New Scotland Yard.

It is hoped that the collection in its revised form may furnish material for the comparative study of facts and opinions, relating to different periods and to different countries, and may thus be of use to administrative officers of the public services, as well as to students of sociology in its many phases.

August, 1935.
